

Jina-gundulu: Palm Island Sustainability Hub

Building community, sustainability and local enterprise

Join us and support a unique community development initiative on Palm Island

Residents on Palm Island are working hard to create Jina-gundulu, a Sustainability Hub for everyone who wants to build a brighter future for their families and people. Our vision for the hub is to transform 1600m² of land and buildings into a cheerful, positive space for projects that enable people to learn new skills - such as house building, home repairs, boat building, arts and crafts - and to create small scale, sustainable, economic development. The hub will also be a place for people to share knowledge about land and sea country, and create new sustainability projects, including: community gardens, recycling projects, waste management and other activities.

By focusing on a strengths based approach to community development, the Sustainability Hub will see local people work with other local people to build their skills and help them achieve their goals. Palm Island is a unique Indigenous community in tropical North Queensland. It is home to nearly 2,500 people who are descendants of people from all across Queensland who were forcibly moved to the island from 1918 onwards. Despite its difficult past, we believe the future can be socially, culturally and economically vibrant.

How you can support Jina-gundulu:

- Become a donor
- Become one of our professional advisors
- Visit our hub and volunteer your skills
- Join our mailing list

For more information
email Sue or Valentine:
jina.gundulu@gmail.com